of the purchaser are generated from the transmitter (14) and are sent via a data transmission path (2), e.g. wireless (radio, satellite) or cable (telephone or data network), to a central receiver (3).

The receiver (3) is connected via several data transmission paths (4) to a number of selection and collection stations (5) at different possible destinations. These stations (5) each include a goods store (51) and at least one output device (52) where the purchaser can collect the goods he has ordered according to his identification. The selected goods are made available from the goods store (51) of the selected location on the basis of the transmitted information.

ADVANTAGE - Allows purchaser to buy goods eg. duty free goods during eg. aeroplane, train or ship journey so they are waiting for him to collect at end of his journey, thus saving time.
